The world's population is getting older, and Taiwan is no exception. A country is called a super-aged society when 20% or more of its people are 65 years old or older. Japan already reached this level, with nearly 30% of its population in that age group. By 2050, Taiwan, Japan, and South Korea are expected to reach 35%. This is happening because of longer life expectancy and low birth rates.

An aging population causes many challenges. Fewer young people means a smaller workforce, which can slow down the economy. Countries may need to raise the retirement age or encourage immigration to solve the problem. At the same time, older people usually need more medical care, especially for diseases like dementia. This increases the demand for healthcare workers and long-term care services.

However, aging populations also bring positive things. Many older people stay healthy and active. They may volunteer, help raise grandchildren, or share their experience and knowledge with younger generations. With smart planning, societies can turn the challenges of aging into new opportunities.

57. What makes a country a "super-aged society"?

- (A) 10% of the population is over 60 (B) 20% or more of the population is 65 or older
- (C) Most people retire before 60 (D) The population is shrinking quickly

- (A) A rise in crime (B) A shortage of schools (C) A smaller workforce (D) More traffic jams

59. What disease is mentioned as common among older people?

- (A) Asthma (B) Flu (C) Dementia (D) Diabetes

60. How can older people be helpful in society?

- (A) By paying more taxes (B) By becoming doctors
- (C) By sharing knowledge and helping families (D) By moving to other countries
